Mission: The Sharing the Collection program is one of the ways we live out the second principle of Unitarian Universalism: “Justice, equity and compassion in human relations.” This program provides financial assistance to non-profit community service organizations in the furtherance of their important work.

What We Do: The first Sunday collections of every month are donated to one of the many local non-profit community service organizations in Washtenaw County which serve predominantly disadvantaged and vulnerable populations, such as low income families and individuals, people who have been targets of discrimination or disabled or abused populations; and organizations which depend on community support in terms of funding and/or volunteers. Sharing the Collection also supports Unitarian Universalist service organizations like the UU Service Committee and the Michigan UU Social Justice Network (MUUSJN) as well two long term UUA commitments to Habitat for Humanity and IHN/Alpha House.
